

Global ocean governance for enhancing the ambition of national commitments on oceans

Monday
9 December
2019

13:15
14:45
Room 1

Official Side Event
IFEMA
Madrid, Spain

In the context of COP 25, the International Center for Comparative Environmental Law (CIDCE) based in France, the Center for Climate and Resilience Research (CR2) based in Chile, the Scripps Institution of Oceanography based in University of California San Diego, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Chile, organize a conversation panel on global ocean governance. The panel will address, the interconnections between the law of the sea, environmental law and the challenges for ocean ecosystems in a context of climate change.

Program

13:15 hrs. | First part. How can global ocean governance contribute with the protection of the ocean in a context of climate change and national jurisdictions?

Emilie Viviane Gaillard, Director of the Normandy Chair for Peace.
"The time for global ocean governance has come: recognizing the rights of marine ecosystems to protect the future of the future".

Pilar Moraga, Center for Climate and Resilience Research, (CR2), Chile.
"Climate change laws and ocean".

Agnes Michelot, Director of SFDE, Centre International de Droit Comparé de l'Environnement.
"Areas Beyond National Jurisdiction: new perspectives for ecological solidarity?".

14:15 hrs. | Second part. How can we increase ocean action and conservation in a climate change setting?

Natalya Gallo, Scripps UC San Diego.
"Opportunities for increasing ocean action in climate strategies".

Hiroko Muraki Gottlieb, Ocean International Council of Environmental Law.
"Climate change and the new High Seas Treaty".